“We will improve dermatological care of patients in underserved areas of the world”

The International League of Dermatological Societies (ILDS) is a non-governmental organisation that promotes the improvement of dermatological care, education and science across the world.

We bring together over 160-member societies from more than 80 countries. The ILDS has access to the experience of more than 100,000 dermatologists.

We celebrate and share the broad range of approaches to skin health and disease that exist throughout the world.

ILDS DermLink seeks to support applications from member societies to undertake initiatives that help patients with skin disease in underserved parts of the world. We welcome applications from anywhere in the world. All applications need to be supported by an ILDS member society.
